THE EASTER SPIRIT

Come, let us sit and talk about the miracles of spring— (Now, why don't that dressmaker send my dress? The careless thing!) See how from out the barren earth the lovely flowers rise And nod in gladness 'neath the newer glory of the skies. (My hat is trimmed with violets, with pink illusion draps; And, O, I wish that it were here! It's quite the latest shape.)

How beautiful when winter ends to contemplate the fields And see the dandelions, just like little golden shields! (My coat, you know, has buttons that are made of Roman gold— They cost! My goodness! Well, the price I never yet have told.) I think one should sit silently and contemplate this life, And see how sweetness rises from the hours of stress and strife.

The bursting buds—they typify the good in everything, And show us how in mind and heart there is a gentle spring. (I think it's more than time enough for my dress to be here; I wish you'd ring that modiste up and tell her so, my dear.) The daffodil, the columbine—all of the flowers fair— They whisper of a lesson that the early flowers bear.

Let us go solemnly and sit, and listen to the songs, And join in spirit with the mood that actuates the throngs— (That milliner must hurry up, or she will make me late— And I must have some time, you know, to get my hat on straight.) Oh, how it helps one, now and then, to contemplate and see The moral lesson that is held in all the things that be!

The thrilling melodies that rise in every Easter hymn, The mellow light that faintly dies, all shadowy and dim— (Why, here it's 10 o'clock at night; they said that sure at 9— They'd have them here all safe and sound—that dress and hat of mine. Please call them up and tell them that I'll die of sore distress if Easter morn'ng finds me with no new hat and
